The Board of Governors of Capilano College last week announced that Dr. Greg Lee will assume the role of president of Capilano College in March 1995. The announcement was made by Robin Wilson, college board chair.

Dr. Lee joined Capilano College in 1971 as a faculty member in the natural science division. Since that time he has held a variety of positions, serving most recently as vice-president, career and vocational programs. Dr. Lee is active on a number of provincial post-secondary education committees including the Advanced Education Council of British Columbia and the Open University Academic Council.

Dr. Lee earned his PhD in physics in 1972 from the University of British Columbia. He is a life-long resident of the Lower Mainland, and currently resides in North Vancouver.

"The selection of a new president marks the beginning of a new era for Capilano College," said Wilson. "Working with the community, the college will pursue new directions to meet the post-secondary educational needs of our community. It promises to be an exciting and productive future."

Current initiatives at Capilano College include the introduction of new programs, such as commercial animation and environmental science, and the construction of a new student and instructional services building in North Vancouver and a new campus facility in Squamish.

The college is also working with the Ministry of Skills, Training and Labor to obtain approval for Capilano College to grant four-year applied degrees.

"To better prepare students for employment in the new economy, we hope to be able to offer applied degrees in area showing strong employment growth, such as telecommunications, tourism and information technology," said Wilson.
