

NEWS photo Kevin Hill

GREG Lee, Capilano University president and vice-chancellor-elect, holds the robe he'll wear at Monday's inaugural convocation at the school's North Vancouver campus. The ceremony to instal the institution's first-ever chancellor gets underway at 7 p.m. at the Sportsplex.

Capilano U to install school's chancellor

Erin McPhee

emcphee@nsnews.com

MONDAY marks an important step in the evolution of Capilano College into a university.

That evening, the school community will gather at the North Vancouver campus for the inaugural convocation ceremony which will include the installation of the institution's first-ever chancellor, vice-chancellor and president.

Founded in 1968 as Capilano College, the school was officially redesignated as Capilano University by the provincial government in September.

Greg Lee, Capilano's president and vice-chancellor-elect, says that change requires certain governance structures be put in place before degrees can be granted. "One of the main things that gets put in place of course is the chancellor and